

A map of the Crimean Peninsula. The land is white, and the surrounding sea is light blue. An orange line represents the E105 road, which follows the coastline. Several green rectangular labels with 'E105' in white text are placed along this road. The city of Sevastopol is marked with a red dot on the western tip of the peninsula. To its north and slightly inland is the location of Bakhchysarai, marked with a small white circle. Further inland to the north is another small white circle. The city of Yalta is marked with a small white circle on the eastern coast. The word 'Sevastopol' is written in large black text above the red dot, and 'Sevastopol'' is written in smaller black text just above the red dot.
