

Jingzhou: The Place, 2007

Introduction to the Region

Jingzhou is a historically significant city in the central part of Hubei Province. Hubei is one of the larger provinces of China containing more than seventy million people. The capital, Wuhan, contains in the district of Wuchang outstanding cultural and leisure attractions, of which the most famous are the Yellow Crane Tower, one of the Chu Kingdom sites around the splendors of East Lake and the Mao Summer Home. At the western end of Hubei Province is the city of Yichang. It is home to the scenery of the Yangtze Gorges, and the new Three Gorges Dam. These, with the splendors of the Yangtze River are currently the main tourist destinations of Hubei Province.

Between these major visitor destinations is the walled Ancient City of Jingzhou. In addition to the Walled City the region has many splendid examples of history and culture featuring principally three great historic periods of China: the Chu, the Three Kingdoms, and the River Yangtze cultures.
