

A map of Senegal, West Africa, is shown in a solid orange color. The country is surrounded by a light gray background representing other landmasses. The Atlantic Ocean is visible to the west in a light blue color. A white arrow points from the left towards the city of Tivaouane, which is labeled in a white box. The word 'SENEGAL' is written in large, bold, white capital letters across the center of the orange area. The map also shows some internal geographical features like rivers and a large lake (Lake de Guiers) in the southern part of the country.
